Bird Eye Chilli

Bird Eye Chilli, the best crop and quality u will find only in northeast india origin.shu of 1lacks to 3lacks. bird eye chili, bird's chilli or thai chilli is a chilli pepper, a cultivar from the species capsicum annum, commonly found in northeast asia. It is often confused with a similar-looking chili derived from the species capsicum frutescens, the cultivar "siling labuyo". Capsicum frutescens are generally smaller and characteristically points to the sky. Unlike bird's eye chilli, capsicum frutescens are often much hotter than habanero chilli. Bird's eye chilli can also be found in india, particularly in meghalaya, assam, and kerala. It is used in traditional dishes of the asian cuisine. This cultivar is also found in rural areas of mizoram, where it is used as a substitute for green chilis.

It is also a main ingredient in kochchi sambal, a salad made using freshly scraped coconut ground with bird's eye chillis and seasoned with salt and lime juice. It is used extensively in thai, lao, khmer, indonesian, and northeast indian cuisine.

Products

Lakadong Turmeric

We are a quality-conscious firm, engaged in making available high-quality Lakadong Turmeric in the international markets. We conduct our operations from West Bengal, India. Offered by us in different grades and ratings, our Turmeric has no match in the market. In order to deliver qualitative content, we meticulously pack it and ensure safe side deliveries. One can rely on us for reasonable prices. The Jaintia Hills District of Meghalaya produces some of the finest turmeric in the world with its "Lakadong" (curcuma longa) variety. Most of the turmeric is cultivated by small and marginal farmers for household consumption and for sale as a cash crop.

Due to its high curcumin content, robust aroma, colour and organic nature, this variety could have good market potential in India and possibly abroad. The IFAD-supported Livelihood Improvement Project for Himalayas in Meghalaya (2004-2012) has been working to capture this niche market and help enhance the incomes of poor rural farmers.
